The Digital Rosetta Stone Project

The Digital Rosetta Stone is a project of the University of Leipzig in collaboration with the British Museum and the Digital Epigraphy and Archaeology Project. The goal is a collaborative digital edition of the inscription for addressing standardisation and customisation issues and creating data that can be used by students to understand the document in terms of language and content. The project has produced a complete EpiDoc XML transcription of the text, textual and tranlsation alignments, and morpho-syntactic annotations. Part of the project are also a 3D model of the stone and annotations of the text on high resolution images.
